Site is brown, cool, flat open land. At the site something is moving in a side by side up and down motion.

There is a man climbing up high on something like a roof. He is watching, looking out. He keeps moving and bending (AOL: as if he just got off a helicopter.) He is there for security. He is not important.

In another area of the site are a group (more than 12) of dark-haired men (AOL: indian) sitting around so that they can see each other. They are having an important, special meeting. They are dressed alike (AOL: military uniform), specifically for this meeting. The clothing is a light greyish color and is belted at the waist (AOL: tunic). It is "on the occassion of" (exact translation of words used in the meeting and repeated several times by individuals making a point) something. Because of this occassion, they must make a decision. This is official and related to the concept of governing. The men are speaking a foreign language. They are making a choice: choosing a person, a replacement. This is very solemn, serious. Seems to be the result of death. The group is not happy. One man in particular, is very old, he is glad that he is what he is today, but he is old and very tired. He has previously been to this type of decision-making meeting. He feels strong responsibility to be there but he almost would rather be dead. He has lived too long he feels, he is tired.

The men have made a risky choice. They have chosen for newness, youth, a breath of fresh air. This is risky but necessary. If they chose as similar choices had been made in the past they risk great loss. This choice for newness and change will also result in loss but it will not be as severe or long-lasting. They are creating a new era. They are all surprised by their decision and they were surprised that they were all thinking along the same lines: risk and newness despite predicted difficulties. The choice is surprising and unusual.

The ultimate leader after this is sturdy, dark haired man in his fifties with a flat nose and very big pronounced cheek bones. He has impeccable posture. He is wearing a tight-fitting hat that matches his dress exactly. He feels he must always dress like this as a leader. He speaks at least three languages one of which is highly symbolic. He thinks in several languages. He speaks English even though he hates to. His english is good, as it must be. In his position, he can not afford to rely on translators. He is a risk-taker. He has been groomed to behave as he does. He understands people and what makes them tick to a much, much greater degree than people give him credit for. (AOL: he seems religious).
